

Taking care of your soap

What you can expect from our soaps

How long does your soap stay fresh?

Our handmade soaps will stay “fresh” for years – really! Handmade soaps get better with age, becoming harder, longer lasting and milder. Over time, however, the soap may lose its fragrance intensity, so we recommend using it within 6 months to a year.

By law, we are required to place an expiry date on our products which is set at 3 years from the date of production. To be honest, we don't know anyone who can resist our soaps that long.

How long should my bar of soap last?

Well that depends on how often its used and how its cared for. If properly stored and drained between uses, you can typically expect a bar to last at least 3-4 weeks or longer.

To care for your soap and make it last longer:

Place your soap on a soap dish that keeps it from standing in water,
Avoid leaving soap in a direct spray of water as this will dissolve it much faster.
Ideally, allow your soap to dry completely between use,
Try using a wash-cloth, foaming bag or shower puff instead of rubbing soap directly on your skin.

What if I have other allergies?

Allergies come in a wide range of forms. Some people are sensitive to any of a variety of oils and/or essential oils. If you have had problems with other skin care products in the past, you should be careful of any product you use in the future.

Our soaps are not tested to be hypoallergenic, and any sensitivities would be most likely to occur with our scented products. If you are not sure, we recommend that you first try an unscented option on a limited skin area (such as your arm). If you do have any form of reaction, do not continue using the product.
